Seed.—First of all, then, the quality of the seed is an item of no small account. The writer, from several years experience with him of the seed of the s FEMALE DISEASES. these plants—the sorgho in particular—and their manufacture into sirup and sugar—has witnessed more than one justance when an entire crop of cane—which to all appearance were rich in saecharine, proved on trial to be perfectly worthless; and doubtless the same may be said of some varieties of sweet corn. My advice then is to all who intend to emhark in this business either on a large or small scale, see to it that you plant none hut pure and unadulterated seed.

Soil—The sorgho delights in a rich sandy or gravelly loan with a southern exposure and considerably elevated. No matter how highly ese plants-the sorgho in particular-and
